To Kath Thorne, Programme Officer, South Gloucestershire Council

Thornbury is still a well-defined and characterful country town, and the Ring Road (Morton Way) is an asset which fits in very well with the delightful rural surroundings, and should therefore be kept as a boundary.

There should be no more of the obscene devastation which is taking place to the north of Bristol (Filton, Emerson's Green, Stoke Gifford etc) - and indeed where are all the jobs to be found to satisfy the rapidly-rising population? Then of course there is the question of the increasing traffic problems, and overload of essential services.

We have had our fair share of harassment in this area - please leave some still relatively unspoiled havens like Thornbury intact for all (including future generations) to enjoy before it is too late. Once ruined, never recovered.
